About

President Suzzallo’s message about the special location of the University of Washington

“The University of Washington is the farthest West of the American Universities. It looks over the waters which unite the East and the West and is neighborly with the peoples and institutions of Asia. It lies on the seam of the garment of world civilization, where the oldest and the newest cultures meet. Its location charges it with a special intellectual responsibility—to interpret the Orient and the Occident to each other. By the discharge of this simple duty it enlarges common understanding, the one solid ground for our hope of world cooperation and peace.”

— Henry Suzzallo (1875-1933)
President of the University of Washington, 1915-26
“The President’s Message,” Tyee (1926)

The Department of Asian Languages and Literature offers instruction in the principal languages and literatures of Asia, including East, Southeast, Central, and South Asia. Emphasis is placed on the roles of these languages within the cultures they serve as well as on linguistic, textual, and literary analysis. The department offers undergraduate degrees in Chinese, Japanese, Korean, and South Asian languages and literature, and graduate degree programs in Chinese, Japanese, Korean, South Asian, and Buddhist Studies.

For more information you can view the Asian Languages & Literature Fact Sheet (PDF).

History of the Department

The Department of Asian Languages and Literature was founded in 1909 as the Department of Oriental History, Literature, and Institutions. Its first faculty member was Reverend Herbert H. Gowen (1864-1960).

It was renamed several times:

• Oriental History, Literature, and Languages (by 1914);
• Oriental Life, History, Languages, and Literature (by 1924);
• Oriental Life, Languages, Literature, and History (by 1925);
• Oriental Studies (by 1928);
Far Eastern Studies (by 1942); and
Far Eastern and Slavic Languages and Literature (by 1949). (Source: \textit{General Catalog})

A Far Eastern Institute was spun off from the department in 1946 with the objective of integrating undergraduate and graduate instruction in Far Eastern studies, and established at the level of a separate college or school. Later renamed the Far Eastern and Russian Institute, it is now the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies and is part of the College of Arts and Sciences.

In 1969, the Department of Far Eastern and Slavic Languages and Literature reorganized as two autonomous units: the Department of Slavic Languages and Literature and the Department of Asian Languages and Literature.

As far back as the last decade of the nineteenth century, the university offered a program of studies in “ancient languages,” in which a course of instruction in Sanskrit was offered along with those in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. These early Sanskrit offerings were gradually supplemented by instruction in other Asian languages:

- Chinese (1926)
- Japanese (1928)
- Korean (1944)
- Mongolian (early 1950's)
- Tibetan (1952)
- Hindi and Tamil (1967)
- Thai (1967)
- Vietnamese (1981)
- Indonesian (1991)

Department of Asian Languages & Literature
University of Washington
225 Gowen Hall
Box 353521
Seattle, WA 98195-3521

Phone: (206) 543-4996
asianll@uw.edu

\textbf{Source URL}: https://asian.washington.edu/about