Resources

This page on academic resources at the University of Washington is still under development. Many other types of resources, however, are available in the department and at the University.

Advising

Students who have declared a major in Asian Languages and Literature have several resources available to them for academic and general advising. Interested and prospective students are encouraged to contact the advisers for information on the major and for referrals to faculty members who might be available to discuss goals and plans.

Financing Your Education

For information on ways to finance your studies at the University of Washington, please see our Funding Resources for Students page.

Undergraduates in particular should investigate the Office of Financial Aid which offers workstudy jobs. The Career Center also offers a free resource for UW students and alumni to search for jobs, internships, and volunteer opportunities.

Studying Abroad

The Department also has information about study abroad opportunities.

After the University

Visit our Careers page to see examples of what you can do with an Asian L&L degree and resources to help you find jobs and internships. Also, check out a useful online resume review tool.

Visiting Scholars

Individuals who are interested in becoming Visiting Scholars in the Department should consult our Departmental Guidelines.

Translating/Tutoring Services

Please note that the Department of Asian Languages and Literature is unable to offer commercial translating or tutoring services or make recommendations concerning such services.

Organizations

Other UW Departments and Resources

For Faculty and Staff

Departmental policies, procedures and forms; information on faculty meetings and departmental committees.

For Teaching Assistants

Guides and resources for departmental teaching assistants.
